Continuous Emissions Monitoring

- › NOx exceedance recorded on Compressor 1 in August. Details of the exceedance are included in the August 2013 CEMS report.
 - » The three hour exceedance (13 August) was caused by a cracked engine mount which increased engine vibration and caused the compressor engine to run rich and increase NOx.
 - » A configuration error by the CEMS supplier caused the RGP SCADA to display lower NOx levels, which resulted in the High NOx alarm not being triggered.
 - » AGL first became aware of the NOx exceedance on 05 September.
 - » A number of corrective actions have been implemented including repairs to the cracked engine mount, correction of configuration error, additional RATA testing, lowering High NOx alarms, and increased reporting requirements for the service provider to AGL.
 - » An incident investigation report has been submitted to the EPA.
- › EPA issued a PIN to AGL (11 July 2013) for failing to upload CEMS monitoring reports within 14 days. All reports are available at www.agl.com.au
